Several individuals assisted the Parsons team in providing research materials and local expertise about the Middleford Mills area. Edward F. Heite of Heite Consulting in Camden served as a research consultant and provided Parsons with several historical documents, including an unpublished manuscript written by a local Middleford resident. Glen Mellin, a local Middleford resident and archaeologist who first documented the Middleford Mills as an archaeological district, aided the Parsons historians and archaeologists with relocation, identification, and documentation of many mill-related features. Mr. Louis Callahan, a local Middleford area resident, pointed out previously undocumented mill-related components on his property.
